Petersbourg, September 19, N. S.

PART of the Swediſh Priſoners arrived here the 6th Inſtant from Finland, and the Remainder, who were moſt wounded, came Yeſterday. They were all immediately carried to Court, and the Grand Dutcheſs ſaw them in the Great Hall as ſhe went to Chapel. The Lieutenant Colonel Aminoff is lodged at Count Oſterman's, and Count Waſſaborg at the Felt Marſhal's. The Loſs on the Swediſh Side is ſaid to amount to upwards of 4800, beſides the Garriſon of Wilmanſtrand, which was 700 more. All the Officers are treated with the greateſt Humanity and Care. They are upon their Parole, and the Field Officers have had their Swords returned to them. As there are a great many of the Nobility among the inferior Officers, they have deſired that they may be treated rather with regard to their Birth than their Rank. General Wrangel's Wounds have prevented his Arrival, but he is expected in a few Days. He will be lodged at the Grand Marſhal Count Lowenwold's. A Regiment of Huſſars have been ſent to the Wibourg Side, and a Party of about 6 or 7000 Coſſacks, who arrived Yeſterday within 20 Verſts of this Place, were alſo ordered hither.

Copenhagen, Sept. 30, N. S. The Squadron, which lately came from Iceland, has ſuffered by the Weather, and made no Capture. A ſmall Frigate called Chriſtians Oe, which was ſeparated from the Squadron above mentioned, in the Categat, has not been heard of ſince.

Presbourg, Sept. 30. The Elector of Bavaria has, in Quality of Archduke and univerſal Succeſſor of the late Emperor, ſummoned the Subjects of Upper Auſtria to do Homage at Lintz on the 2d of next Month. In the mean while his Troops begin to extend themſelves to this Side of the Ens, for want of Subſiſtance for the Cavalry in Upper Auſtria.

Hameln, Oct. 6. On the 3d Inſtant the King, accompanied by ſeveral Perſons of Diſtinction, went to view the Camp near this City; as ſoon as the Soldiers were acquainted with his Majeſty's Arrival, they came out of their Tents, and formed themſelves in Regiments from one End of the Line to the other, but without Arms. Early the next Morning his Majeſty went again to the Camp, where he found the Troops under Arms, and ranged in order of Battle. The King mounted his Horſe at the Right Wing, and rode all along the Line to the Left; from whence he returned to his Tent; and the Signal having been given to the Troops by the firing of a Gun, the Regiment of Dragoons of Pont Pietin, which was at the Right Wing, paſſed in Review before his Majeſty, and was immediately followed by all the other Troops. The Regiments being all returned to their Poſts, a Diſcharge was made of the Artillery, which was anſwered by the whole Line, the Fire running from Right to Left four Times ſucceſſively. About Three in the Afternoon his Majeſty came hither, where Prince William, Prince George, and Prince Frederick of Heſſe, dined at his Majeſty's Table, as did alſo the Prince of Waldeck, a Prince of Gotha, and the Count de Lippe-Buckebourg, whom the King has named Aid de Camp General of all his Armies. Yeſterday his Majeſty went again to the Camp, and ſaw the Cavalry go through their Exerciſe on Foot: And this Morning his Majeſty went
